THE FUTURE IS NOW

One of the most exciting times of the year is June, when we at Nordisk Film & TV Fond receive the submissions of the graduation students for Nordic Talents. The interest is always huge, and even this year we received more than 40 applications. Local issues in the film schools may reflect the number of submissions from each country but these trends come and go, and every year we are surprised by the diversity of projects.

During my six years at the helm of Nordisk Film & TV Fond the projects have become more personal. We also see more hybrids between documentary and fiction, and many more drama series suited for platforms and streaming. Moreover, the Nordic region has become more transnational, where young people from different cultural backgrounds choose to cross borders to study their passion profession.

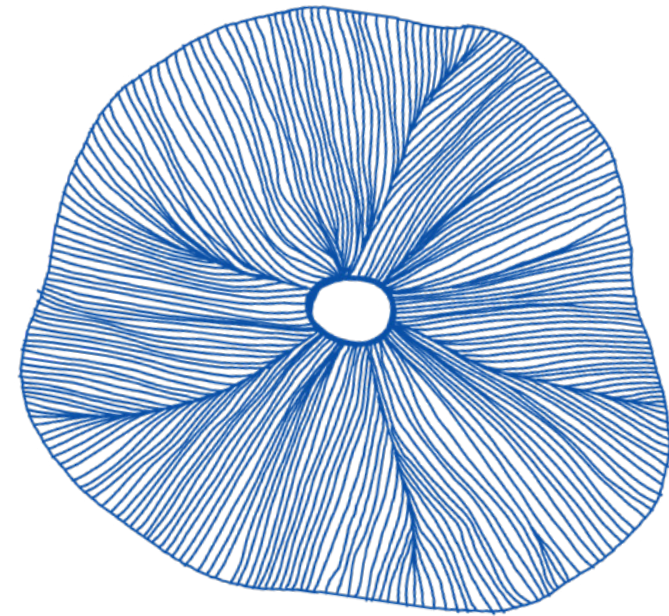

One significant aspect has changed over these six years. Majority of submissions comes from female filmmakers or teams combining both female and male, and this has been reflected also in the selection of the final 15 chosen to pitch. Hearing this generation speak their mind and present their project has made me very confident in my view that a change in expression, perhaps even a dogmatic change, is really taking place, in a most natural way.

We have experienced many previous Nordic Talents winners from the past 18 years became names in the international and Nordic arena – including many nominated for the prestigious Nordic Council Film Prize – but I should remind that some who did not perform so well in NT have also become celebrated filmmakers!

My message to the selected 15 is that pitching is always a nerve-wracking challenge, but your life won't be over after it! Enjoy it, support and cherish your peers, as making great films and TV is teamwork and a craft that takes time and patience to master.

I want to thank this year's jury, they are not going to have it easy either. For some years we have had the habit of inviting a combination of previous NT alumni together with other more established industry representatives, and this is reflected in our jury even this year.

My special heartfelt thanks go to Benedikt Erlingsson, who has kindly accepted to hold the Master class this year. The talk moderated by the sparkling Silje Riise Næss will be on the use of music this year. Benedikt Erlingsson once said to me that one should not make a film unless there is a message to deliver. Easier said than done, but clearly, this is what he has achieved to master in Woman at War. Hats off!

My staff and colleagues at Nordisk Film & TV Fond deserve a big hug and public thank you for their professionalism and fellowship. The collaboration with the National Film School of Denmark has always been excellent. Together we have been very fortunate in creating an event where students and the professional Nordic industry want to come together. I welcome you and thank everyone for attending – many of you return and that is very valued! I wish you all an amazing 19th edition of Nordic Talents.

MASTER CLASS

Benedikt Erlingsson ©Juan Camillo Estrada

With fear of playing with stereotypes: to bystanders, every Icelander seems to be an admirable multi-talent. You are not only a singer, you are also an actor and perhaps an accountant. A top-level soccer player and a high school teacher. News reporter, history professor and president of the republic. You get it. Benedikt Erlingsson came into film directing through acting and stage directing. His feature film debut earned him the Nordic Council Film Prize, whereas his second feature earned him a prize in Cannes last year. Since then, hundreds of thousands of moviegoers have been amused and engaged by a Woman at War.

What is the success recipe? Not to speak of: what kind of cake / film is this really? Deeply emotional drama with a stylistic hint of Greek tragedy? Serious Dramatic bid on Nordic eco activism on film, or absurd comedy featuring on screen musical raptuses à la Emir Kusturica?

Music stands out of Woman at War, and will play a central role in the masterclass, as will Erlingsson's slightly absurdist and humorous touch on melodrama. Woman at War's rise to international fame is an example to follow for other Nordic films. It's just that Erlingsson, in all his uniqueness, may not be that easy to follow. At least without following his Masterclass at Nordic Talents 2019.

Welcome to an undoubtedly entertaining, sincere and humorous two hour session, featuring former actor and stage director, current actor, film and stage director and climate activist Benedikt Erlingsson. We present to you a masterclass on the art of being a bit at war with contemporary film conventions and appealing to an audience at the same time. Bonus tracks from the uncomparable debut Of Horses and Men may occur.

The master class will be moderated by Silje Riise Næss and takes place in the afternoon Thursday 5 September while the jury makes their final decisions.

Of Horses and Men – Erlingsson's first feature film as a writer and director – won more than 20 international awards including Best New Director at the 2013 San Sebastián IFF and the Nordic Council Film Prize in 2014.

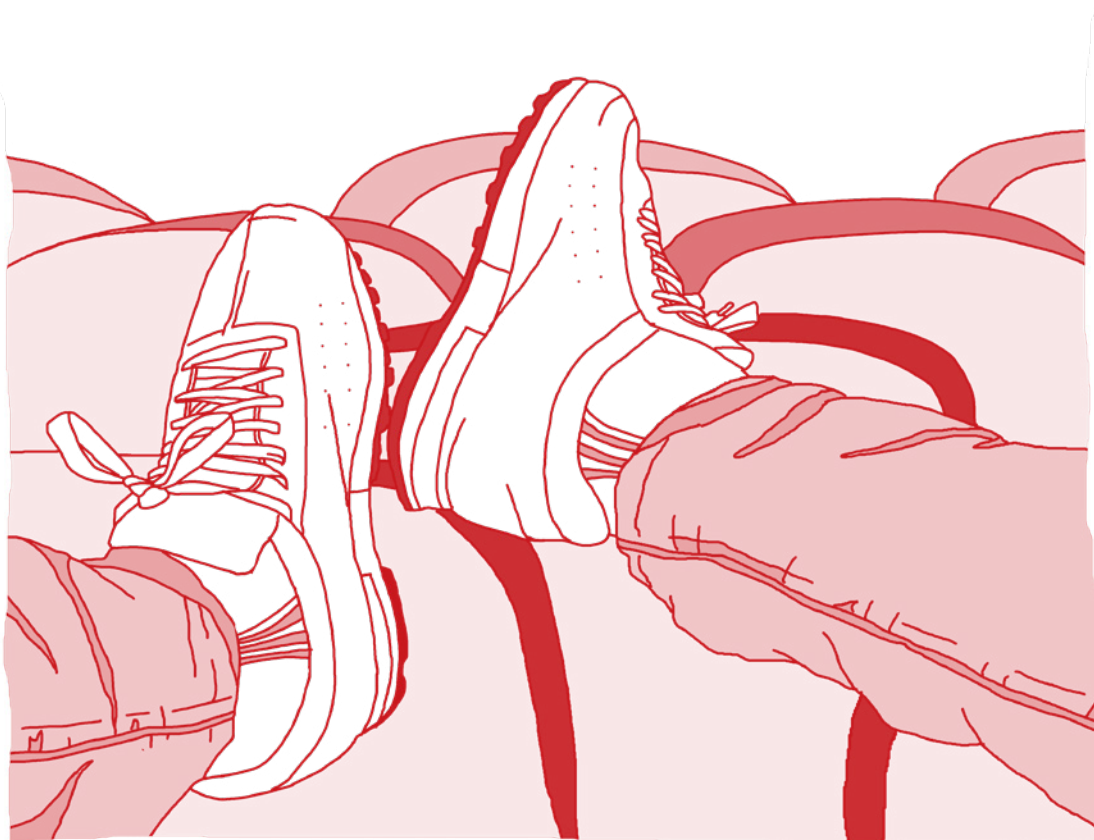

Erlingsson is a winner of the 2016 Gan Foundation for Cinema.

His 2nd feature Woman at War had its world premiere at the Critics' Week at the Cannes Film Festival in 2018 where it won the SACD Award for Best Screenplay.
